“Today Americans of different beliefs came together again,” Obama said at the White House, adding that the agreement makes necessary budget cuts while preserving needed investments. Obama noted he was standing in front of a window with a view of the Washington Monument, which, like other federal facilities, will remain open in the days ahead.

Obama's negotiating partners -- House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, and Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev. -- made announcements on Capitol Hill, just an hour or so before the midnight expiration of the continuing resolution that was funding the government.

The Senate passed the funding extension late Friday, with the House following suit early Saturday morning.

In a speech on the Senate floor, Reid said the proposed agreement calls for cuts of $78.5 billion, including items in the budget Obama proposed two months ago that have never been approved by Congress.

Reid also said the temporary extension funds the government through Thursday, by which time lawmakers expect to have approved a budget for the rest of the fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30.

36. Who are President Obama’s negotiation partners?
   (A) Mr. Speaker and Ms. Leader
   (B) Mr. Boehner and Mr. Reid
   (C) Ms. John and Mr. Harry

37. The short term agreement reached will extend US government funding for about
   (A) a week
   (B) a day
   (C) a minute

38. In a speech on the Senate floor, about how much budget cut the proposed agreement will be cut according to Senator Reid?
   (A) In the millions
   (B) In the billions
   (C) In the trillions
B. Boost your diet with a rainbow of fruits and vegetables

By Darla Carter, abstracted from The (Louisville) Courier-Journal, April 9th, 2011

If fruits and vegetables aren't the stars of your meals or at least strong supporting characters, it's time to recast with an eye toward diversity. That's according to the American Dietetic Association, which is encouraging the public to "eat right with color." That means choosing a rainbow of hues each day to infuse the diet with vitamins, minerals, antioxidants and fiber.

"We're talking about eating foods with different colors — red, green, blue, white, yellow, orange — because all these different foods and all these different colors provide different nutrients for our bodies," said Amy Jamieson-Petonic, a spokeswoman for the association.

Think about your own diet. Sure you eat your potatoes, corn and iceberg lettuce. But when's the last time you had kale, jicama, beets, blackberries, avocado, squash or kiwi fruit? "I don't know if we think about different things like blueberries and blackberries and strawberries and raspberries and kale and spinach and red peppers and orange peppers and yellow peppers and broccoli and cauliflower — all these good things," said Jamieson-Petonic.

The latest U.S. Dietary Guidelines for Americans, which were released in January, advise consumers to increase their consumption of fruits and vegetables. One trick suggested by dietitians and the U.S. Department of Agriculture is to fill half your plate with fruits and vegetables. An overnight change isn't expected, though. "Just gradually work up to that," said Sandquist, a certified diabetes educator. "One week just add a few more, and pretty soon you'll notice that half your plate is vegetables and you'll be just as full and probably more comfortable."

39. Why does the American Dietetic Association encourage the public to "eat right with color?"

(A) Good for health

(B) Save the planet

(C) Help the farmers
40. Why do we eat foods with different colors?
   (A) It is because U.S. Department of Agriculture asks people to fill half plate with fruits and vegetables.
   (B) It is because Amy Jamieson-Petonic said “all these good things.”
   (C) All because these foods provide different nutrients.

41. What nutrients are not within a rainbow of fruits and vegetables?
   (A) Vitamins and minerals
   (B) Fiber and antioxidants
   (C) Ozone and softener

C. Aftershock could weaken Japanese damaged nuclear facility

By Oren Dorell. Abstracted from USA TODAY, April 9, 2011

A large aftershock that rattled Japan late Thursday knocked out electricity to the northern part of the country and raised concerns about further damage at the crippled nuclear power plant in Fukushima. Two people were killed in Thursday's earthquake, fire department spokesman Junichi Sawada said today. More than 130 people were injured, according to the national police agency.

Thursday's magnitude-7.1 aftershock did not cause further damage at the plant, according to the Tokyo Electric Power Co., which owns and operates the Fukushima Dai-ichi nuclear power plant damaged by the magnitude-9 quake and subsequent tsunami March 11.

Further aftershocks could threaten the plant in its weakened state, said David Lochbaum of the Union of Concerned Scientists. "The Fukushima plant was originally designed to withstand seismic forces and earthquake motions," Lochbaum said. "But the damage that has occurred to date has degraded that ability to resist ground motion."

Structures inside the reactors have been damaged by superheated and melting nuclear fuel and hydrogen explosions. Plant workers have added many tons of water to the containment vessels around several reactor cores in stopgap efforts to keep them from overheating. "All that added weight could make it more likely to have additional failure," Lochbaum said. "Conditions at that plant are so fragile it can't really stand any more stresses."
Austria's Central Institute for Meteorology and Geodynamics indicated that, at most, the Japanese nuclear reactors have emitted about 20% of the iodine-131 and 50% of the cesium-137 that Chernobyl did.

Most other reports put the release closer to 10% for both kinds of radioactive atoms, said Kelly Classic, a radiation physicist at the Mayo Clinic in Minnesota and a spokeswoman for the Health Physics Society, an organization of radiation safety specialists.

42. The Fukushima Dai-ichi nuclear power plant is located in
(A) Northern part of Japan
(B) Southwestern part of Japan
(C) Tokyo of Japan

43. In comparison to Chernobyl accident before, Austria’s nuclear expert assessed the seriousness of current Fukushima Dai-ichi nuclear accident as
(A) Less serious
(B) Much more serious
(C) About the same

44. How many injuries did this latest aftershock incur on local residents?
(A) Less than ten
(B) More than one hundred
(C) More than ten thousands

45. What was the disaster that subsequently happened after magnitude-9 earthquake in Japan on March 11th, 2011?
(A) Minasui
(B) Namitus
(C) Tsunami
